

Linda Bridges Biography

Linda Bridges graduated from the University of Southern California in 1970 and was hired by Bill Buckley to come work for National Review. She spent thirty years in the editorial department, including ten years as managing editor, before becoming Buckley's literary assistant. In that capacity she copy-edits his writing and helps with the research for his books. She is the author of many articles, mostly on food, travel, and music, and is the co-author, with William Rickenbacker, of one previous book, The Art of Persuasion: A National Review Rhetoric for Writers. Her latest book, Strictly Right: William F. Buckley Jr and the American Conservative Movement, is co-authored with John R. Coyne Jr.

For more information, or to schedule an interview with Linda Bridges, please contact Kristen Schremp at kristen@kaspublicity.com or 703.928.5527